PREFACE.

THIS book gives its own reason for being. Examination of its contents will cause surprise that such a work was not produced long ago. The railway army in America numbers about 600,000 men, commanded by some 5,000 general and division officers, in whose official positions and location frequent changes are being made; and yet hitherto there has been no attainable information by which, knowing a railway officer's name, his railway connection and address could be learned. The primary object of this work is to give an alphabetical list of the railway officers of the United States, Canada, and Mexico, with present title, name of railway, and post-office address. That such a list—aside from its personal interest—will be of very great practical value to railway men, and to the many thousands in various branches of trade and manufactures who have business relations with railway officers, needs no argument. In innumerable cases it happens that a railway officer's name becomes known by means of a letter, a telegram, or a chance introduction, another railway man, or to a manufacturer or to some other business man, without definite information as to his connection. Often his road is mentioned only by its initials, or, still more frequently, is not given at all, so that the excellent Official Guide, which is indexed only by roads, gives no aid in locating him; even if the road is given, the name desired may not be in the published list of officers. Only an alphabetical list will supply the information, and such a list is here for the first time given. This is the first distinguishing characteristic of the "Biographical Directory of the Railway Officials of America."

The second characteristic peculiar to this work alone is its record of the railway history of the officers named. Railway records have only begun to be made. The first generation of railway men has hardly passed away, and yet the history of most of the railway officers of to-day is a record of many changes and great progress—a record, too, full of encouragement to those who are ambitious to rise in their chosen profession. The fact that nearly all of the great railway managers of to-day have risen, by their own exertions from the humblest ranks in the profession, is the best evidence that other young men may do likewise. “What man has done man can do,” is the inspiring incentive to be gained from these pages by the ambitious and persevering.

The purpose of this undertaking is not confined to a single volume. Railways are rapidly multiplying; every year as it adds thousands of miles to our railway system adds hundreds of officers. Moreover, changes, promotions, retirements, deaths, are constantly making additions to the records already commenced. Hence this work must be an annual volume, bringing the changes and additions hereafter down to the close of each year. It is easy to see that the contents and value of this Biographical Directory will therefore increase vastly as the years go on and the career of each officer is lengthened out and the number of names is continually increased. The sad record of the dead of the year, too, will form a feature of growing interest, as the intellectual greatness of the men who become eminent in railway management and operation is more and more appreciated by the world, and as railroading becomes more and more a recognized science. These men do a great and beneficent work for their day and generation. Their names and histories should not be allowed to perish, as soon as they pass from the scenes of their exciting and wearing activities. From these considerations it will be seen that the biographical feature of this work is destined to be of very great and increasing value and interest.

First volumes are always the most difficult of production, yet few can realize the many difficulties and the immense amount of labor of many hands, through many months, necessary to produce the first volume of The Biographical Directory of the Railway Officials of America. The correspondence alone has probably required a hundred thousand communications. Every effort, by correspondence, investigation of records, and submission of proofs, has been made to insure completeness and correctness, and yet it is not doubted that errors will be found. When the fact is considered that many thousands of names had to be dealt with, and that changes of position are constantly going on, it will be seen that it would be extraordinary if some recent changes and additions were not omitted—indeed, these must necessarily occur between the time of sending the revised proofs to the printer and the appearance of the volume. The difficulty of preparing the subsequent annual volumes, however, will be very small compared with that attending this issue, especially as the true nature and value of the work will then be fully understood, and the editors will have, they feel sure, the still more hearty co-operation of all railway officers.

For this initial volume the list has been confined to general and division officers directly and prominently connected with the management and operation of railways. The ranks attempted to be fully covered are as follows :

Presidents.

Vice-presidents where actively in service.

General managers.

Assistant general managers.

General, assistant, and division superintendents.

General and assistant general freight agents.

General and assistant general passenger and ticket agents.

Chief engineers.

General agents.

It was not deemed practicable in this volume to generally include officers of the financial, accounting, purchasing, or mechanical departments, the field being sufficiently broad when it included officers directly connected with the executive and operative work, and in the direct line of promotion. A few exceptions have been made where records were sent us before this plan was decided upon. It may be found advisable in the next volume to enlarge the number of classes here given.

This volume, in its 276 pages of fine type, includes 3,764 official names, classified as follows: Presidents and vice-presidents, 581; general and assistant general managers, 259; general, assistant, and division superintendents, 861; general and assistant general freight agents, 415; general and assistant general passenger and ticket agents, 378; chief engineers, 177; general agents, 173; other officers, 920.

It was desired to give the railway record of each person named, but in some cases this was not practicable in the first volume. Some failed to furnish the desired information, through the mistaken idea that the work was to be devoted to personal eulogy, instead of being, as will now be seen, a compendium of bare facts, without a qualifying adjective. Others feared that the publication of their records would make them too conspicuous. But considering the fact that each name is but one of several thousands, and that every official, however high, finds his peers in these pages, this excuse is not well founded. On the other hand, those whose records are not given are rendered conspicuous by their absence. In many cases, however, the official career has been so brief or so little varied that there is really nothing to chronicle. For example, most of our presidents have occupied no other position in the service, and have no railway record to give.

The great majority of the sketches here published were furnished by the subjects, over their own autographs. In some cases, however, the information was obtained from other sources, hence several of the sketches are incomplete. We confidently expect that for the next edition the responses to circulars and letters asking for information will be so general that we shall be able to give every record in full. After an examination of this volume, the objections which some raised who did not understand its object will be found to be purely imaginary, while the usefulness of the work will be self-evident every day.

Hereafter official changes will be compiled as they occur throughout the year, and the record will be kept up so closely that very little time will elapse between the final preparation of the annual volume for the press and its publication.

The editors invite the cordial co-operation of all railway men and others interested, in their efforts to provide an annual railway biographical directory, which will not only be found of very great service as a work for daily reference, but will prove of increasing value as the only compendium of the railway personal history of this continent.

The portraits of several of the representative railway executives of the country, with whose names all are familiar, but whose faces comparatively few of the great body of railway officers have seen, form an interesting feature of this volume. It is proper to add that the selections were made and the engravings provided by the publishers alone, and that the subjects thereof are in no way responsible for their appearance. We say this lest any of the gentlemen thus exhibited may fear being thought unduly desirous of prominence, although all of them have achieved a distinction that makes their names and features almost public property. There are other railway officers whose likenesses it would be equally desirable to give were it practicable. In future volumes it is hoped to greatly enlarge this feature of the work.

As already stated, the plan of this Directory, if it is favorably received as we confidently expect, contemplates an annual publication. The present edition is largely experimental, and future issues will have the benefit of the experience gained in the difficult work already accomplished.

Asking the forbearance of the railway officials of America toward this their Directory, for any errors and omissions which may be detected, and for which they themselves are in most cases to blame rather than the compilers, and again inviting their help in making future editions absolutely perfect, this volume is respectfully offered as a useful as well as interesting contribution to railway literature.

"Mr. Kirkman's books differ. It may be said, from those commonly written on technical subjects in this, that they not only describe the details of the subject, but what is quite as important, and vastly more interesting to the student, they explain its philosophy and the theory and spirit that animate it; in other words, he not only tells the reader how certain duties are or should be performed, but he also tells him the reasons therefor; his books are consequently filled with numberless nice distinctions and subtleties associated with the operation of railroads, and the duties and responsibilities of railway servants."—The Railway Service Monthly Magazine.

No recent invention connected with the economical production of heat and steam is attracting more attention than Hutchinson's Smoke and Spark Burner. The fact that smoke and sparks can be burned up in the furnace or fire-box is being demonstrated every day by at least 500 Locomotives and over 2,500 Stationary Furnaces which have been equipped with this device. The method employed is the result of fifteen years' study of the problem, and is very simple, as well as thoroughly effective. Currents of air and steam are injected into the fire-box, and the device used to accomplish this cannot get out of order. Railway men are assured that by using this invention the annoyance, as well as the waste caused by sparks and clouds of black smoke from locomotives, may be entirely avoided. Address, W. S. Hutchinson, 103 Adams Street, Chicago.
